A BUCK JUMPER. Australian squatters in general are excellent and fearless riders, mounting horses fresh from the bush, untamed, unbroken, and full of many vices, particularly the formidable one of buck jumping, in a way that would astonish many an English rough rider and steeple-chase jockey, Mr. F- was remarkable for his powers in this way. He had a large mob of horses on his run, and they were generally notorious for their buck jumping propensities, and I remember his accompanying me one day on my return from his house to the diggings, mounted on an animal just driven into his stock-yard from the bush. The forest here and everywhere else in Australis, is covered with the blackened trunks of trees of every size that have fallen victims to fire, and it is a usual thing for men well mounted, to take a straight line across it, leaping over such logs as practicable. We were amusing ourselves in this manner when we came to one of the prostrate giants of the forest, which, although my horse was a good one, I should never have attempted to jump, and did not imagine F-, on the little illcondition weed he was riding, would think of doing. I was astonished, however, to observe him dig his spurs into the beast's side, rush him at it, and as I anticipated, make a clean sommersault over the trunk of a tree
